¹The first survey to list choirs and instrumental ensembles for children and young people was conducted in 2009. This methodological change may have caused further musical groups for children and young people to enter the statistics – a factor to be considered in the total number of ensembles and their membership over time. Moreover, according to a survey conducted in 2009 by the Sociological Institute of the German Evangelical Church (EKD), there are some 3,000 gospel choirs that view themselves as Evangelical church choirs, but are often independently organised, and may thus be excluded from the EKD's statistics.

²Church choirs, including children's and youth choirs (estimated). The EKD lists choirs and instrumental ensembles for children and young people under a single heading rather than separating them into instrumental and vocal groups. The dotted line reflects the development of church choirs since 2009 under the assumption that most of the ensembles are active in the vocal area and thus should be counted as choirs.
